Administration of the Oath of Hippocrates

I do solemnly swear by all those things I hold most sacred that I will lead my life and practice this art in uprightness and honor; That I will be loyal to the practice of medicine and just and generous to its members; That into whatsoever house I shall enter, it shall be for the good of the sick to the utmost of my power, holding myself far aloof from wrong, from corruption, from the tempting of others to vice; That I will exercise my art solely for the betterment and cure of my patients and will give no drug, perform no operation, for a criminal purpose even if solicited, far less suggest it; That whatsoever I shall see or hear of the lives of men and women which is not fitting to be spoken, I will keep inviolably secret. If I be true to this oath, may a full life and good repute be ever my fortune; with the respect of all good persons, in all times. But should I trespass and violate this oath, may the reverse be my lot!

College of Medicine Academic Houses

The COM Academic House program was established in 2016 in an effort to promote student success and wellness, and strengthen faculty-student relationships. UAMS has created 7 academic houses, which include medical students and faculty, who spend time mentoring, sharing ideas and enjoying each other's company. The Houses are named after luminaries who contributed to improving the health of Arkansans:

The Lowe House

Dr. Betty Ann Lowe developed Arkansas Children's Hospital in Little Rock (Pulaski County) into a nationally known, competitive hospital by acting as an advocate, enlisting the help of a famous family, procuring state funding, and adding new, innovative departments. In addition to being a prominent figure in Arkansas pediatrics, she became the first Arkansan to become a pediatric rheumatologist. She was a fierce advocate for children and an inspiring mentor for our students.

The Beall House

Ms. Ruth Olive Beall was superintendent of Arkansas Children's Hospital and Home from 1934 to 1961. She was largely responsible for the hospital's survival during the financial difficulties of the Great Depression and for its expansion and improvement in the following years. Beall was concerned not only for people who suffered from tuberculosis but also for people who lived in poverty. At her own expense, she provided toothbrushes and toothpaste to children she met while traveling to rural schools throughout the county and taught children how to use them.

The Tank House

Dr. Patrick Tank received his Ph.D. in anatomy at the University of Michigan. He joined the College of Medicine faculty in 1978. Dr. Tank rose through the ranks of what is now the Department of Neurobiology and Developmental Sciences. He directed the Medical Gross Anatomy course and the Anatomical Gift Program for 27 years. More than 4,000 future physicians studied the intricacies of the human body with Dr. Tank, benefiting tremendously from his expertise and his passion for teaching. He received numerous teaching awards. He was a pioneer in web-based medical education in the 1990s. More recently, Dr. Tank was internationally known as the editor of three editions of "Grant's Dissector."

The Abernathy House

Dr. Robert S. Abernathy has been called the "ultimate university citizen" by UAMS leaders and colleagues in appreciation of nearly 50 years of service to the campus. Abernathy, along with his wife, Dr. Rosalind Abernathy, arrived in 1957, when he was recruited from the University of Minnesota to the Department of Internal Medicine. Ten years later he was named department Chairman, a post he held for a decade. Dr. Abernathy directed the Division of Infectious Diseases after his term as Chairman, and he retired in 2002. In honor of Dr. Abernathy's dedication to Internal Medicine, the Arkansas Chapter of the American College of Physicians named its annual laureate award after the highly respected physician and leader. Dr. Abernathy trained many of the state's physicians, educators and leaders in internal medicine and public health with warmth, kindness and compassion.

College of Medicine Academic Houses

The Ish House

George William Stanley Ish was a prominent Black physician in Little Rock (Pulaski County) who cared for citizens of the capital city and overcame much adversity to achieve his position in this state. He graduated from Harvard Medical School and was instrumental in founding both United Friends Hospital and the J. E. Bush Memorial Hospital, primary centers for the medical care of black patients. He was also largely responsible for the inception of the McRae Memorial Tuberculosis Sanatorium in Alexander, the state's separate black sanatorium. He served as a staff member at predominantly white hospitals in Little Rock. Physicians of all races held him in the highest regard for his vision, his compassion and tenacity.

The Compton House

Neil Ernest Compton of Bentonville (Benton County) was a physician of obstetrics by profession and a conservationist by avocation. He is widely recognized as the founder of the Ozark Society to Save the Buffalo River, which he and his associates initiated in 1962, at a meeting in Fayetteville (Washington County). Today, it is known as the Ozark Society, Inc. Its original goal was to stop the construction of two proposed U.S. Army Corps of Engineers dams on the Buffalo River. Dr. Compton was passionate advocate for preserving the beauty of our state.

The Bruce House

Dr. Thomas A. Bruce served as Dean of the UAMS College of Medicine (COM), Inaugural Dean (Dean pro tem) of the College of Public Health (COPH) and Dean pro tem of the Clinton School of Public Service. He also served as the first Director of the COPH Office of Community-based Public Health. Those at UAMS and in the greater medical and public health community who were fortunate to know Dr. Bruce remember him as a true friend, champion and visionary. Dr. Bruce has been described as a truly unique and wonderful "renaissance man" who had unbounded compassion. He was not only known for his leadership and philanthropy, but his wise words, kindness and humility.
